

The Transformation of Aged Care Through Technology

Ross Dawson Director, Advanced Human Technologies

Information technologies are transforming aged care. Telemedicine offers new ways to care for the elderly wherever they are. New generation tools such as memory aids improve people's quality of life. Communication technologies connect loved ones in powerful new ways. eHealth initiatives, soon supported by pervasive high-speed broadband across the nation, will enable better care and better health. World-renowned futurist and author Ross Dawson offers insights into the extraordinary promise of information technology in aged care, and how best to take advantage of the resulting opportunities.
